Description of Property and Eligibility Determination (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

These two houses are typical examples of the housing stock within the Perrie Lane neighborhood. 5806 Perrie Lane is an example of the one-story, two front-gabled houses designed in the Craftsman style popular in the 1920s in this area of Southern Maryland. The house has been altered with the construction of a one-story addition with a half-gabled roof extending from the front-gabled roof. The porch has been screened-in and the house appears to have been re-sided. 5810 is a simple one-story side-gabled vernacular house with a front-gable extending from the main elevation to create a porch. The house has wood siding and the porch has not been enclosed.

The population of Prince George's County, although limited to the county's northern areas and the areas adjacent to the Baltimore and Potomac rail lines, began to rise steadily during the late 19th and early 20th century. The county's population had climbed to over 36,000 by 1910 and had reached 60,000 by 1930. At this time, the economy was still dependent on agriculture. The farmers closer to the urban markets of Washington began to diversify their crops and began to produce more products for the urban populations. Grains and potatoes were in demand in the cities and the access to the rail lines within Prince George's County assured the farmers' crops safe and easy delivery to the urban centers. Perrie Lane is located off of Allentown Road. Camp Springs, located at the intersection of Allentown Road and Old Branch Avenue, was primarily a farming community. Andrews Air Force Base, located near Camp Springs, was constructed in 1942.

The c. 1920-1930 houses are not eligible for the National Register. While they are typical example of the modest residential design in Prince George's County, the resources lack significance related to events, persons, or architecture. Criterion D, information potential, was not assessed for this study.
